

A video documentary

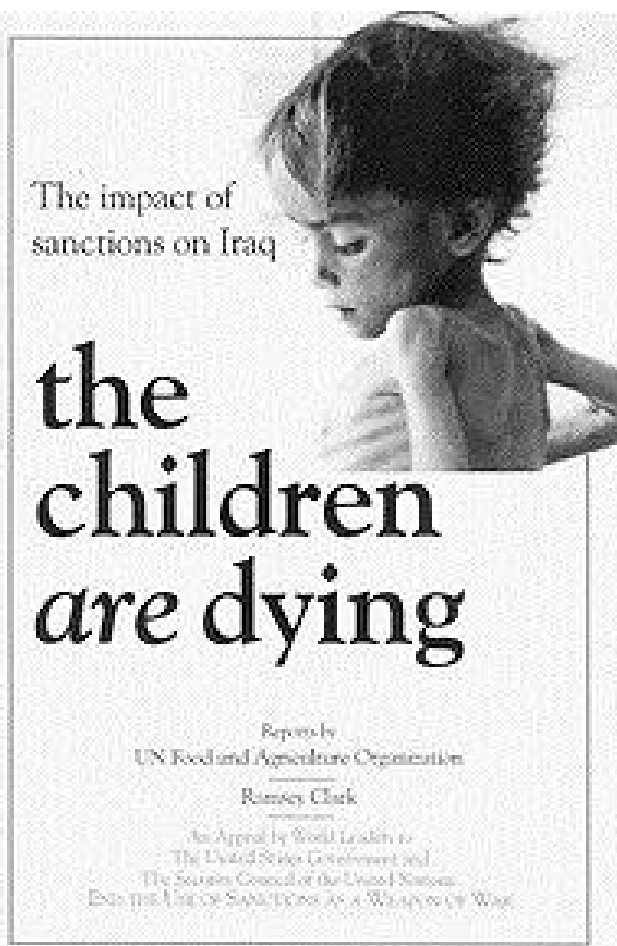

Paying the PRICE: Killing the Children of Iraq

The World Health Organization reported that Iraq had high standards of education and nutrition in 1989. But in 1995, a worker for the World Food Program reported that the situation in Iraq was as bad as anything he had ever seen in the world, and he warned that "time is running out for the children of Iraq." UNICEF has confirmed that between August 1990 and August 1997 1,211,285 Iraqi children died from causes related to the U.N. sanctions. Inflation is so high that people cannot buy enough food for everyone in the family. When a girl fainted in school, her teacher asked her what was wrong and she answered, "It's not my turn to eat today. "Yes the Price is Worth it!" says Madeleine Albright, Former US Secretary of State.

In this important documentary, award-winning, John Pilger, brings back disturbing evidence showing the horrifying impact of the the US-led sanctions against the people of Iraq.

Tuesday 7:00pm

4
Feb 2003

Room 2203
Art Soc Building
University of Maryland

Ten years of sanction have killed more Iraqis than the two atomic bombs dropped on Japan

Sponsored by the PEACE FORUM

For information on this or other upcoming activities, contact snitz@umd.edu